

Child Labour in Domestic Services:

Child Labour in domestic services is very common. It may be paid or unpaid. It takes place in homes and duties include cleaning, cooking, baby sitting, caring etc. Domestic work is mainly done by female child labour. They work long hours, do not go to school and many of them are separated from their parents for long time. Some times these children become the victim of domestic violence. The owners treat them badly which effect the children mental and physical health.

Child Labour in Begging Profession:

There are two types of child beggars; one who is doing it as a profession and the other is child peddler who begs in order to survive. There is huge number of child labour in begging and it is increasing. The employer keeps the major portion of the earning. In addition to begging, children in begging are abused from their childhood either by parents, members of the family or a third party who hires the child in return for the money as a begging tool.

Effects of Child Labour:

- Reduces Human Capital
- Combining Work and Schooling
- Energy Consumption
- Sleep
- Temperature
- Physical Strain

Conclusion:

Child Labour is not only a social issue it is an educational, domestic, economic rather we can say it is a global issue. There is a need for raising awareness among parents and employers about the importance of education and the hazards children face at the workplace. The government should bring out a solid strategy to discourage child labour in the country and support poor families by providing them financial assistance and job opportunities.
